Prospects For Fruit.—There appears to be a good prospect for an abundance of fruit in the coming season, especially peaches. It is said, that in the neighborhood of Salem, New Jersey, it will be necessary to strip the peach trees of one half of their fruit to prevent them from breaking down. A plentiful crop of fruit will certainly be very acceptable as we have not had any, of any consequence, for a number of years.

Birds Protecting Cherry Trees.—A Correspondent of the Cleveland, Ohio, Herald gives the following account of his success in inducing a family of blue birds to make its home in a cherry tree, for its protection from the intrusion of those "happy commoners who hunt in fields for food unbought," without asking leave.

On one occasion, he placed in a cherry tree a neatly constructed box, fashioned after our common marten boxes. On the next day he observed a male blue bird visiting it, examining the premises with great care both inside and out. At length he retired, but soon returned with the female to whom he seemed to be pointing out the advantages the place afforded.—This was before the fruit began to ripen, and by the time the cherries put on their blush our feathered couple were busily engaged in nurturing and protecting a hopeful progeny. Some unfortunate beetle, spider, or worm was caught by them, and devoured or conveyed to their nestlings as often as once every minute during the day, by which the garden fruit trees were saved from much injury.

The pugilistic character of these birds at this interesting period of their sojourning at the north, is well known to naturalists; and was sorely felt by many a robin, cedar bird and woodpecker, during the progress of incubation and nursing of this pair.

Flocks of these various depredators, with their appetites sharpened by the sight of the luscious cherries, repeatedly attempted to gratify their palates, but no did they approach this forbidden territory, than they were violently attacked by the little blue birds, and compelled to retreat without partaking of the fruit.

So effectually were their approaches resisted that the cherries continued to hang in clusters, on this tree, long after they had disappeared from all other trees in the neighborhood.
